Understanding Your Next Chapter

You're entering a new season of life, and this chapter is about helping you understand what you want that season to look and feel like. Your "next chapter" isn't about starting over — it's about building on everything you've already lived, learned, and overcome.

This section gives you space to pause, reflect, and gently consider:

1. What matters most to you right now

Your comfort, your safety, your independence, your peace of mind — these are the foundations of your next chapter. This guide helps you name what's most important so your decisions reflect your values.

2. What's working well in your life today

You may already have strengths, routines, or support systems that are serving you. Recognizing what's going well helps you build from a place of confidence, not fear.

3. What feels uncertain or needs attention

Every next chapter includes areas that need clarity — your home, your finances, your health, or your support network. This guide helps you identify those areas without judgment or pressure.

Your Readiness Snapshot

Your Readiness Snapshot gives you a quick, honest look at where you are today as you think about your next chapter. It's not a test, and there are no right or wrong answers. This is simply a starting point — a way to understand what's going well and what may need a little more attention.

This snapshot helps you reflect on four key areas:

1. Your Home

Is your current home supporting your safety, comfort, and daily routines?

This section helps you notice small things that may need adjustment — from lighting and mobility to maintenance and overall safety.

2. Your Finances

Do you have a clear sense of your monthly expenses, income, and long-term stability?

This snapshot helps you identify whether your financial picture feels steady or uncertain, without requiring detailed paperwork.

3. Your Support Network

Who can you rely on — family, friends, neighbors, or community resources?

This section helps you see where you have strong support and where you may want to build more connection.

4. Your Personal Well-Being

How are you feeling physically, emotionally, and socially?

Your well-being plays a major role in your ability to stay safe and independent.

Understanding your readiness helps you see your strengths, identify areas that need attention, make decisions with clarity, and take small, meaningful steps forward.

Home Safety Snapshot

Your Home Safety Snapshot helps you take a gentle, honest look at how well your current home supports your day-to-day needs. This is not a full inspection — just a quick reflection to help you notice what's working well and what may need attention.

This snapshot focuses on four key areas:

1. Daily Comfort & Ease of Movement

Do you move through your home comfortably and safely?

This includes things like:

- clear walkways
- good lighting
- easy access to frequently used areas
- no tripping hazards

Small adjustments can make a big difference.

2. Bathroom & Personal Care Safety

Does your bathroom feel safe and easy to use?

Consider:

- stability when getting in and out of the shower
- grab bars or support if needed
- non-slip surfaces
- easy access to toiletries and towels

Bathrooms are one of the most important areas for safety.

3. Home Maintenance & Upkeep

Is it easy to keep your home in good working order?

Think about:

- repairs you've been putting off
- tasks that feel physically difficult
- areas that need attention but feel overwhelming

Noticing these early helps you plan ahead.

4. Safety & Security

Do you feel safe in your home and neighborhood?

This includes:

- working locks
- smoke detectors
- good outdoor lighting
- feeling comfortable at night

Your sense of safety matters just as much as physical safety.

Financial Snapshot

A simple, judgment-free look at your financial readiness

Your Financial Snapshot helps you get a quick sense of how stable and comfortable you feel with your current financial situation. You don't need statements, documents, or exact numbers for this step — just your honest sense of where things stand today.

This snapshot is designed to help you reflect on four key areas:

1. Monthly Stability

Do you feel confident that your monthly income covers your basic needs — housing, food, transportation, and healthcare? This section helps you notice whether your month-to-month finances feel steady or stretched.

2. Unexpected Expenses

If something unexpected happened — a repair, a medical bill, or a sudden change — would you feel prepared? This helps you understand your level of financial resilience.

3. Long-Term Sustainability

Are you comfortable with how long your current resources will last? This snapshot helps you gently consider whether your financial picture supports your long-term goals.

4. Support & Resources

Do you have people, programs, or community resources you can turn to for financial guidance or support? Knowing where help exists can make a big difference in your sense of stability.

Support Network Snapshot

A simple look at who supports you — and where you may want more connection

Your Support Network Snapshot helps you understand the people, services, and community resources you can rely on as you plan your next chapter. This is not about having a "big" network — it's about knowing who is in your corner and where you may want to build additional support.

This snapshot helps you reflect on four key areas:

1. People You Can Count On

Who are the family members, friends, neighbors, or trusted individuals you can call when you need help, advice, or support? This section helps you identify the people who make you feel safe, connected, and supported.

2. Practical Support

Do you have someone who can help with things like transportation, errands, appointments, or home tasks when needed? This helps you understand where your practical support is strong — and where you may want to strengthen it.

3. Emotional Support

Who listens to you, checks in on you, or helps you feel grounded when life feels uncertain? Emotional support is just as important as practical support.

4. Community & Services

Are you connected to community programs, senior centers, faith communities, or local services that can offer help when needed? This section helps you see what resources are already available to you — and where you might want to explore more options.

Your 3 Action Steps

Small steps that help you move forward with clarity and confidence

You don't need to have everything figured out today.

You don't need a full plan.

You just need a place to start.

These three action steps are designed to help you take gentle, meaningful steps toward a safer, more stable next chapter — at your own pace.

1. Choose One Area You Want to Focus On First

Look back at your snapshots — home, finances, support network, or well-being.

Which one feels most important right now?

Which one would make the biggest difference in your daily life?

This is your starting point.

2. Identify One Small Step You Can Take This Week

Your step should be simple and doable, such as:

- calling someone you trust
- checking one safety item in your home
- organizing one bill or document
- asking a question you've been putting off
- exploring a local resource or program

Small steps build momentum — and momentum builds confidence.

3. Write It Down and Share It with Someone You Trust

Write down the area you chose and the step you plan to take.

Then tell someone — a friend, a family member, a neighbor, or a counselor.

Why? Because when we say something out loud or write it down, it becomes real.

Sharing your intention creates gentle accountability and reminds you that you're not doing this alone.

You might say:

"I've decided to focus on my home safety this week. I'm going to check the lighting in my hallway."

"I want to look into a local senior center. I'm going to call and ask about their programs."

That's it. Three steps. One area. One action. One person to share it with.

You're already moving forward — and that matters more than you know.
